

Bruno Stefans book is one of the first and most detailed accounts in English of the challenges involved in integrating a post communist prison system in the European Union. The author has personally interviewed over several years hundreds of prisoners, guards, administrators, and their families. The result is a one of a kind detailed account of daily life in Romanian prisons. In June 2004, Ionut Cristinel Maftei, 24, a prisoner serving 5 years for stealing two horses, was killed in Iasi Penitentiary by the warden, Gabriel Geger. Irritated by the prisoner's rebellious, sarcastic and annoying behavior, the warden, standing in the hall of the department, violently yanked Maftei's arm while the prisoner was attempting to exchange merchandise (cigarettes for cans) with another prisoner from the neighboring cell through a sort of peep hole, thus smashing the prisoner's head against the wall, dislocating his skull in front of dozens of other prisoners' a terrified but passive audience to the crime. This is the image of the Romanian penitentiary system today: promiscuous, destructive for prisoners and staff alike, deleterious to their sense of responsibility and their attachment to the values of a normal society. Beyond the declared purpose of re-education, a penitentiary universe exists that works according to its own laws, most of which unwritten, but nevertheless born from written ones. This universe engenders a culture where its members feel, think and act in ways which may seem unusual, but are only natural to the insiders.
